Miles Suarez-Davis

Founding Growth at Zeroset | State Infrastructure for Enterprise AI | Make48 Lead Tool Technician & Brand Ambassador
United States

Summary

Miles Suarez-Davis is Founding Growth at Zeroset, the research lab behind Nebula. As enterprises move from AI demos to real workflow automation, the next bottleneck is not only model capability, but whether AI systems can operate on persistent, structured context. Zeroset is building the state layer for that future: infrastructure that gives agents a queryable representation of what is true, when it became true, and why.At Zeroset, Miles works across growth, partnerships, customer development, and product strategy. He helps translate Nebula's technical foundation into the problems enterprise teams face every day: fragmented data, disposable context, stateless agents, and workflows that cannot compound because their state is never represented in a way AI systems can reliably use.Miles also serves as Brand Ambassador and Lead Tool Technician at Make48, a national invention competition and Roku TV series. After joining Make48 at age 13 as one of the youngest contestants in the competition's history, he later returned to support live builds, manage tool operations, and help students turn ideas into working prototypes.Before Zeroset, Miles founded LunarBoost, an AI-powered stock scoring platform focused on identifying breakout public companies through data-driven signals. He also founded MSD Woodworks, a custom design and fabrication studio, after developing his background in hands-on building, fine woodworking, and fabrication.Across his work, Miles is focused on moving ambitious ideas from concept to execution. Whether building enterprise AI infrastructure, physical prototypes, products, or partnerships, his work is grounded in the belief that useful technology is not just about better models or better ideas, but about creating the systems that let people and machines act on what they know.
